Accommodations

Michael Howland
Coordinator
Veteran and Military Services
Accommodations

• Many veterans returning to or entering college for the first time will have no idea how a newly acquired injury (physical or psychological health-related) may impact their learning, especially if no previous learning difficulties had been present prior to their military experience.
Accommodations

• Additionally, a veteran may be discharged from the military without realizing that she or he may experience a significant learning or memory-related impairment, since a true diagnosis of PTSD, and in some cases a mild TBI, can occur after the service member has separated from military service.
Accommodations

• All of this is often compounded by the fact that most veterans will not identify themselves as a person with a disability. Most are probably unfamiliar with the term “reasonable accommodations” and don’t know how to access them. Therefore, it is all the more important for faculty and staff to be aware of the potential need for accommodations.
Accommodations

• For faculty: Do not presume to know the needs of military students, nor should you assume the needs and potential accommodations needed by one student veteran will be the same for others.
Accommodations

• For faculty: Consider including a statement on every course syllabus inviting students to meet with you confidentially should a need for academic adjustments or accommodations be necessary or arise at any time during the course.
Accommodations

• For staff, including disability support service staff: Helping student veterans understand the fine distinctions between a VA disability rating and a disability under the Americans with Disabilities Act or Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act is an important task, as is presenting information about their rights and responsibilities should an accommodation be necessary in education or the workforce.
Accommodations

- Unfortunately, stigma does exist, especially with regard to mental health and cognitive abilities.
- Many vets see claiming disability services as a stigma that reflects negatively on their service.
- Pride of service sometimes conflicts with acknowledgment that some experiences may have affected their ability to concentrate/study.
Accommodations

• Accommodating the needs of veterans does not mean that you have to drastically change how you teach.
• However, being aware of the issues veterans face and being accommodating to their needs can ease their transition from military life to the civilian classroom, and improve the educational experience for all students.
Contact Information

• Michael W. Howland
• Coordinator, Veteran and Military Services
• mhowland@olemiss.edu
• 662-915-5021